Marketing Doctor

Marketing Check-up

Tupperware

As of October 8, 2024

Condition: Critical

When the parties stopped

Tupperware says its 1946 container created the modern food storage category, and Tupperware parties became part of popular culture. For decades the party plan was both how people bought Tupperware and what the brand felt like. In September 2024 the company filed for Chapter 11. This check-up looks at how a brand tied to one channel lost its customers when the channel aged.

Key takeaways

- Tupperware parties were the sales channel and the brand experience at once. The system worked so well that Tupperware eventually removed its products from stores.
- By 2022 retail made up only 4% of revenue, and the active sales force had fallen 18% in a year.
- Tupperware reached Target stores in October 2022, aiming at younger customers less familiar with direct sales. It came late.
- Sales in 2022 were less than half their 2013 peak. After repeated warnings about its survival, the company filed for Chapter 11 in September 2024.

Marketing health check

Area	Finding
Channel	Aging. The party plan stayed the main route to buy.
Sales force	Shrinking. Active sellers down 18% in 2022.
Retail presence	Late. Only 4% of revenue; Target from October 2022.
Recognition	High. The name defined the food storage category.
Reason to pay more	Unclear against cheaper unbranded containers.

Timeline

When	What happened
1946	Earl Tupper's container creates the modern food storage category.
Apr 1951	Tupperware Home Parties is set up.
2013	Net sales peak at $2.67 billion.
Oct 2022	Tupperware arrives in more than 1,900 Target stores.
2022	Net sales fall to $1.30 billion. The active sales force falls 18%.
Nov 2022	The company first warns about its ability to continue.
Oct 2023	Laurie Ann Goldman becomes chief executive.
Sep 17, 2024	Tupperware files for Chapter 11 and seeks a sale to protect its brand.

What happened: the party was the brand

Earl Tupper set up Tupperware Home Parties in April 1951. For decades the party plan was both the sales channel and the brand experience: friends, demonstrations and a container you could only get from someone you knew. The system worked so well, the Associated Press noted, that Tupperware eventually removed its products from stores.

A channel carries its own audience, and that audience ages. In its 2022 annual report the company still said it primarily used a direct selling model, with retail making up four percent of revenue. That year its average active sales force fell 18%, to about 313,000.

The diagnosis: a famous brand tied to one channel

- The channel aged with its customers. Younger shoppers buy storage containers in stores and online, not at parties.
- Absent where people shop. With retail at 4% of revenue, most new customers never saw the product where they actually buy.
- A late move to the shelf. When Tupperware reached more than 1,900 Target stores in October 2022, its then CEO said younger customers would "now find our brand in retail." By then the business was already shrinking fast.
- No clear reason to pay more. The job customers hire a food container for had not changed. On a store shelf, Tupperware had to explain why it was worth more than the container next to it.

The treatment it needed

Whoever owns the brand next inherits a famous name and a channel problem. A Target listing is a tactic. Deciding which channel leads, and what the others are for, is the strategy. Our prescription:

- Make retail and online the main routes to buy, and keep consultants as a service and community channel.
- Give shoppers a plain reason to pay more for the name than for an unbranded container.
- Report clean numbers on time, so retailers, lenders and sellers can plan with the company.

The result: half the sales, then bankruptcy

Net sales peaked at $2.67 billion in 2013. In 2022, the last full year the company reported, they were $1.30 billion, and they kept falling in 2023. The company warned about its ability to continue in late 2022 and again in April 2023.

On September 17, 2024, Tupperware filed for Chapter 11 and said it would seek a sale process "to protect its iconic brand." The name survived the parties. Whether it survives on the shelf depends on a reason to choose it there.

Lessons for your marketing

1. Your channel is part of your brand, and channels age with their customers.
2. Be present where new customers already shop, even if your best channel is somewhere else.
3. Watch leading signals such as active sellers, repeat buyers and the share of sales from new customers, not only revenue.
4. Treat a channel shift like brand building: it takes years, so start while the core business can still pay for it.
5. On a shelf next to cheaper alternatives, a famous name needs a visible reason to cost more.

The doctor will see you now.

Book a free marketing check-up at marketingdoctor.ca/contact. We'll examine your marketing, show you what's holding growth back and prescribe what to fix first.

Sources

1. PBS American Experience on Tupperware parties.
https://www.pbs.org/wgbh/americanexperience/features/tupperware-parties/
2. Associated Press via Boston.com on the Chapter 11 filing (September 2024).
https://www.boston.com/news/business/2024/09/18/iconic-tupperware-brands-seeks-chapter-11-bankruptcy/
3. Tupperware 2022 annual report (Form 10-K).
https://www.sec.gov/Archives/edgar/data/1008654/000100865423000079/tup-20221231.htm
4. Fox Business on Tupperware arriving at Target (October 2022).
https://www.foxbusiness.com/lifestyle/tupperware-selling-target-stores-nationwide
5. Tupperware 2013 annual report (Form 10-K).
https://www.sec.gov/Archives/edgar/data/0001008654/000100865414000004/tup10k122813.htm
6. Tupperware 2022 net sales (SEC financial data).
https://www.sec.gov/Archives/edgar/data/1008654/000100865423000079/R3.htm
7. Tupperware announcement on its going-concern warning (April 2023).
https://www.sec.gov/Archives/edgar/data/1008654/000100865423000027/a20230407pressrelease.htm
8. Tupperware announcement of its Chapter 11 filing (September 2024).
https://www.sec.gov/Archives/edgar/data/1008654/000100865424000068/exhibit991tupperwarepres.htm

This check-up uses public information available on October 8, 2024. It is marketing analysis, not investment advice. © 2026 The Marketing Doctor.